Why we started?

We saw a gap in the marketplace, a lack of commitment, reliability and professionalism to the motor industry/customers, a low standard of service and high costs.

What we have done?

Provided the industry with more choice, more flexibility and competitive pricing by considering their budget before our earnings.

Worked with?

We have serviced a wide number of clients including HR Owen, H&L Motors and Carpenters which have all been in business for over 50 years and are our oldest clients. In addition, we are proud to say we have never lost a client, thus proving constant commitment and dedication to building relationships.

Why do it?

Because we love seeing the end result; it's great when you know you've saved someone a substantial amount of money and the personal service everyone gets from us as a team. We started this with the aim of becoming a household name, taking pride in what we do and never disappointing.

What's the difference between washing and valeting?

There is a difference. One looks clean, the other is. One is below acceptable and the other makes a car look like it's worth the price the dealership is asking. It's detail, it's methodical, it's having an eye for detail and checking every aspect of the car when you think it's finished to find those little imperfections that most people don't see. It's not something you can teach, a valeter has to have an eye for perfection.

Why people take pride?

Because it's your name on a fleet that counts. It's an image that makes first impressions count for a very long time.

What's different?

We work with our customers and consider their business like it was our own. Our commitment is high. We're flexible with all our customers giving them varied options from the outset. We're there to support them no matter what their needs are.

Commercial

If you are running a business, you will understand the importance of projecting the right image for your company and, for this, the benefits of valeting are obvious. But every successful business should also keep economy in mind, and every opportunity to save money should be considered. The diesel engines in vans, minibuses and pick-up trucks should be good for 200,000 plus miles, but many companies trade in their vehicles long before this time because they look tired.

Employees have a tendency to treat new vehicles with respect, but once they begin to look tired they tend to stop treating them with care. If your vehicle looks like a mess, your employees are less likely to show respect. Careful and regular valeting and maintenance keeps this situation in check, helping fleet managers keep up-to-date with the condition of their vehicles.

A regular valet programme also prevents rust getting out of hand, which, once set in, can become almost impossible to cure. Seeing to stone chips and scratches makes sure the bodywork is not exposed to the elements, arresting corrosion before it begins.

It's simple, your vehicles maintain their condition, you reduce the amount of depreciation and your vehicle lasts longer than you had expected. This is especially important for vehicles that have acquired the extra investment of specialist modifications such as refrigeration units, racks or even sign writing.
